Regarding Pollination and Pollinators,

Some fruit trees are semi or full self-fertile, but most need a pollinator to produce a heavy fruit crop. A pollinator is another variety with a flower season that overlaps the variety in question, and produces adequate pollen. Many urban areas have enough existing fruit trees so pollination is never a problem. If there are none nearby, it is necessary to plant pollinators

We do our best to source quality trees, refunds on bare roots are, unfortunately, not available. Trees subject to availability, contact us to reserve your trees.
